Reagan administration officials said that they were considering proposals to charge veterans at least a nominal amount for healthcare services, to make benefits contingent upon financial need, or to curb benefits for veterans who sought treatment for illnesses and disabilities unrelated to their military service.

The push for the latest proposals came from White House policy analysts, the Office of Management and Budget and the president's survey on cost control. They have warned of huge growth in the veterans' health system unless Congress changes the law in the next few

The figures increased doubt among economists that the nation's output of goods and services will grow as strongly as the Reagan administration has said is needed to help reduce the projected federal budget deficit of $200 billion.

Economists, including an informal adviser to the president, said there is no evidence that the economy can rebound enough to grow at the 4 percent rate next year and through the end of the decade that the Reagan administration has

However, the administration remained upbeat and said it expected a rebound from a temporary lull sometime next year.

"It's evident from what's going on in the fourth quarter that growth is still stalled," said Alan Greenspan, an economist and an informal adviser to the president. There would have to be some fairly significant pickup very soon to get back on track" of economic growth that the administration is anticipating.

"The data are unambiguous." said Allen Sinai, an economist. "They tell us a growth recession and maybe something worse" may occur. "All of these numbers were lower than the lowest expectations of the economy," he said. Some economists have said the economy has already entered the first phase of a growth recession. when output increases too slowly to create the necessary number of jobs to keep unemployment from rising.

Economists also blamed the increasing sluggishness of the economy on high interest rates, which they said contributed to a reduction in consumer spending on housing and durable goods, such as major appliances and furniture. The administration's budgetcutting targets depend on a real growth rate of 4 percent annually through 1988 and gross national product increases to about $5 trillion by 1988. GNP was at an annual rate of $3.7 trillion during the third quarter.

If the motion is defeated, the rightist Italian Social Movement will present a demand that parliament send the two men for trial on corruption charges.

A Turin investigating magistrate requested the inquiry in 1981, suspecting the two men of conspiring to obtain the promotion of General Giudice, who in 1982 was convicted of corruption and dereliction of duty in a gasoline-tax fraud. ■ Debt Figure Emphasized Peter T. Kilborn of The New York Times reported from Washington: President Ronald Reagan's central budget team has begun to call attention to the soaring national debt as a way of persuading him to make a more aggressive attack on the federal deficit, administration officials said Monday.

The advisers have stressed that the debt's growing share of the U.S. economy and the prospect that it could force interest rates higher are more serious than any one year's deficit

Using that argument, the offi-cials said, the nine-member economic "core group" is pressing Mr. Reagan to accept targets for a fairly steep decline in federal spending for the next three years.

With the deficit now at more than 5 percent of the national output of goods and services, the proposed goals were to push it down to 4 percent of the gross national product in fiscal 1986, which begins next Oct. 1, to 3 percent in fiscal 1987, and to 2 percent in port said. The recommendations on paramilitary action are contained in "Mandate for Leadership II," a compendium of more than 1,300 proposals for President Ronald Reagan's second term, put together by the conservative Heritage think tank. A similar volume published four years ago presaged many of the policy initiatives of Mr. Rea-

Richard Shultz, an associate professor of international politics at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, wrote the chapter on insurgency and terrorism.

The sections of the report on defense and arms control, which were scheduled to be released Tuesday, strongly support the administration's efforts during the past four years to modernize the U.S. military. The report said that the buildup must continue and that the administration should buy more of some weapons, such as the B-1 bomber, than now planned. The report sharply criticized Pentagon management during the first term and said the defense secretary should take charge of efforts to improve the way weapons are

They also say that the United States should no longer abide by the guidelines of the unratified SALT-2 treaty, which the United States and Soviet Union have said they would respect; should not seek to negotiate a treaty banning chemical weapons, which would be "virtually impossible" to verify, and should not make new proposals in the stalled talks on strategic missiles, medium-range missiles or troop strengths in Europe. Arms control policies based on the hope that negotiations with Moscow will lead to agreements that effectively limit the major instruments of Soviet military and diplomatic power are unrealistic, lead to a false sense of security and do not protect the American people," the report stated. "A new era in arms control is beginning, based on the development of defensive systems to protect the United States and its allies from Soviet missile attack," it said.

The report supported funding for more planes, ships, tanks and other weapons, including some that the administration has not yet proposed or has not persuaded Congress to fund, such as chemical bombs and rockets; C-17 cargo planes; a new, turretless tank to replace the M-1 Abrams, and the Northrop Corporation's F-20 Tigershark fighter jet, which was developed for export but has not been sold to anyone. The report said the administration should "employ paramilitary assets to weaken those Communis and non-Communist regimes that may already be facing the early states of insurgency within their borders and which threaten U.S. interests." Such actions, it said "must be, and must appear to be, benevolent.

There Sits a Terrorist

Colonel Moamer Qadhafi of Libya has taught us a good deal in his bungled attempt to reach into Egypt to kill a political opponent. The going rate for murder among British and Maltese contractors is $250,000, plus $150,000 to the Egyptian locals for dirty work. The fee is payable on receipt, at the Libyan Embassy in Malta, of a clear snapshot of the dead victim. That evidence becomes the basis for boasts that patriotic "suicide squads" have eliminated yet another infidel or Zionist tool.

Thanks to superb Egyptian police work, one of these sordid plots has now been exposed. Shrewdly misled, Colonel Qadhafi's "diplomats" and radio boasted about a killing that never occurred. That was good news. But it is not good enough if the world does nothing more to punish a now-documented case of state terrorism, involving flagrant abuse of diplomatic privilege.

All civilized countries denounce terrorism but none has been willing to close embassies. deny landing rights, freeze assets, or impose any other concerted sanctions. Even after Colonel Qadhafi's "diplomats" killed a London policewoman. Britain and its allies were content to thunder against him without action.

Now the cost of this acquiescence is plain.

As Secretary of State George Shultz has aptly insisted: "Terrorism is a contagious disease that will inevitably spread if it goes untreated. We need a strategy to cope with terrorism in all its varied manifestations. . . . And we have to recognize that the burden falls on us, the democracies — no one else will cure the disease for us." He went even further to propose using military force against merely suspected culprits, a doctrine so sweeping that it provoked justifiable dissent among Ameri-cans. But Libya's infractions fall within the wiser half of the secretary's argument - the call for collective action against proven state sponsorship of terrorism.

So be it. Colonel Qadhafi's trespasses are no longer conjectural. He has used Libya's oil wealth to subvert his neighbors and his diplo-mats to murder enemies abroad. Is the world so hungry for his oil that it will go on pretending he conducts business in the normal fashion? Where are the proposals to punish his conduct? Who will move to close Libya's embassies and isolate its agents? Who will present the case for sanctions at the United Nations? And who will go on defending the grant of diplomatic immunity to proven murderers?

Palestinian Alternatives

Much interest is developing over the pros-pect that Yasser Arafat may be about to con-vene the PLO's "parliament," the Palestine National Council, in Jordan. It proceeds from the possibility that, since Chairman Arafat's numerous foes in the group have been ordered by their Syrian masters to boycott any pro-ceeding sanctioned by him or King Hussein of Jordan, he may be abandoning the requirement for consensus that has paralyzed PLO diplomacy. If the Palestine Liberation Organization is split, the suggestion runs, the part loyal to his ostensibly moderate leadership may find its way to peace talks with Israel.

Except that there is scant basis for hoping that Yasser Arafat's PLO, split or whole, can take the Palestinians anyplace they want to go. Having toppled Lebanon into chaos, Mr. Arafat lost the PLO's last military option when the Israelis invaded and routed his forces in 1982. He had lost the PLO's best political option when he could not, or would not, take advantage of Camp David's quite plausible opening to the Palestinians. Yet one more chance arose when the Reagan administration authorized a private citizen to meet with him 50 times: he completely wasted this rich diplomatic opportunity. As much as everyone would like to see Palestinian moderation encouraged, it takes a willing suspension of disbelief to imagine that

Mr. Arafat is the man for the job. What is the alternative? Perhaps there is no alternative for the Palestinians. Everyone knows what is required: a simple statement, by a credible body of Palestinians, that they demand a state and that, to get it, they are prepared to accept Israel and sit down and negotiate peace. Only such a turn could begin to meet Israelis' valid concern for their security, to melt their discredited concerns for territorial expansion, and to bring American diplomacy into effective play. Without such a turn, there is a sharp limit to what others can do

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration has a modest idea, something to work on at least until a moment for broader diplomacy reappears. The idea is, in Secretary of State George Shultz's phrase, a concern for the "quality of life" in the West Bank — not just improve-ments in the standard of living but in the relationship between ruler and ruled: a lighter police hand, open universities, local development, a restoration of Arab mayors. Many West Bank residents see it as a half loaf. Some Israeli officials see it as a risk. The argument for it is that nothing better is going now.

signs of interest in "humanizing" the war to reduce the civilian toll and in exploring both a cease-fire and eventual participation in government-run elections. Do these signs indicate people's evident desire for peace and to the advantages in continuity of aid and purpose that José Napoleon Duarte's election and Ronald Reagan's re-election have conferred upon the government? Or are those gestures meant simply to distract the government and its U.S. patrons, while the guerrillas use time thus bought to prepare for harsher battle later?

The deep suspicions and still-live conflicts of the civil war rule out a conclusive answer now. That such questions can be asked at all. however, is evidence that the peace process begun last month at La Palma is promoting new modes of thought on both sides.

From the expectation of endless battle — a condition that plays into the hands of extremists — the struggle in El Salvador has moved to an in-between state in which proposals for accommodation are being offered and the civilians who are offering them are necessarily coming more to the fore. Just the other day the two sides saw fit to take part in a public debate in Los Angeles, in which each sought to put its best foot forward for an American gallery.

With the terms of a second conference in El Salvador still being discussed, it is obvious that the two sides are only at the beginning of setting out a negotiating agenda. That exercise, however, is drawing out a familiar set of politiwing suspects that the political wing may be soft. This is the virtue of opening negotiations. It does not ensure that the faction that is more inclined to test negotiations will hold its own, but it sharpens the issue.

From the public evidence, neither President Duarte nor his counterpart on the left, his former running mate Guillermo Ungo, has yet convinced the other of his seriousness. This they must do. Despite their falling out, they still have more in common with each other than either has with the hard-right and hardleft allies they subsequently found.

Mr. Reagan's firmness in support of the Salvadoran government clearly warmed the climate in which peace talks began at La Palma. Whether that climate can be sustained if things get out of hand next door in Nicaragua is very doubtful. And Mr. Duarte still needs steady U.S. help in drying up the death squads and in advancing the sort of economic policies that give him a political payoff. Otherwise the war will go on destroying El Salvador.

Other Opinion

Luring the Russians to the Table

Put in simple terms, the policy of the first Reagan administration toward the Russians was to convince them that a return to the conference table would be to their own advantage, though there was some doubt as to whether Moscow was indeed still capable of engaging in a process of give-and-take. It would be rash to assume that these doubts have now been dissipated, but Washington remains willing to resume and intensify negotiations. However, nobody in the U.S. capital is under any illusions about the difficulty of persuading the Russians to resume talks, while in some fields all hope of arriving at verifiable agreements seems to have been abandoned.

1909: Standard Oil's Breakup Ordered ST. PAUL, Minnesota - Judge W.H. Sanborn, in the United States Circuit Court of the District of Minnesota, has decided that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is an illegal corporation, and he has ordered the company to be dissolved. The decision is one of the most important and far-reaching ever given in a civil action in the American Courts. In the proceedings which have just ended the Government filed a complaint in the United States Circuit Court directed against the parent organization. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and its various subsidiary branches were charged with having entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade in several States and to monopolize the petroleum trade.

1934: U.S. General Alleges Fascist Plot WASHINGTON — Major General Smedley D. Butler, U.S.M.C., retired, caused a sensation [on Nov. 20] by testifying before the House committee investigating un-American activities that he had been approached by a mysterious group to head a march of 500,000 ex-service men on Washington and establish a Fascist régime that would take over the rule of the country. The stormy petrel of the Marine Corps hinted that the backers of this political coup were wealthy Wall Street brokers who were ready to throw 53,000,000 into a fight to oust the President and the New Deal. Representative Samuel Dickstein, chairman of the committee, said that indications were that the general's testimony was correct.

U.S. Political Envoys: Start Them at Home

N EW YORK — Long ago, the Venetian ambassador to Rome, en route to his post, was staying overnight with the grand duke of Tuscany. The duke complained of the poor quality of the envoy the Republic of Venice had sent to his court. "I am not surprised," was the Vene-tian's reply. "We have many fools in Venice." To which the duke retorted, "We also have fools in Florence, but we take care not to export them." Sadly, in the United States the problem of exporting foolish or at least inadequate ambassa-dors continues to be with us. The root of the problem lies in the willingness of both political parties to deal in "bought com-missions" for a significant number of ambassa-dorial appointments. Bought commissions in the British Army disappeared years ago; unfortu-nately, when it comes to an important portion of U.S. ambassadorial appointments, we are still in the era of the Charge of the Light Brigade. The world is simply too dangerous, and America's role too critical, for this to go on.

Each succeeding administration has found American embassies around the world a happy hunting ground in which to satisfy political obligations, financial or otherwise. While some noncareer appointees have been outstanding and others have been very good, many have been neither. As a result, a number of U.S. diplomatic establishments, not to mention long-suffering host governments, have continued to be bur-dened by ambassadorial leadership that is madequate and occasionally worse. This goes on even though the United States has developed one of the finest career diplomatic corps in the world.

be denied the right to send abroad such distinguished noncareer appointees as Ellsworth Bunker, David Bruce, Chester Bowles, John Sherman Cooper, Mike Mansfield, Arthur Burns and others of their caliber. They follow in the great tradition of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jef-ferson—and of the Adamses. Rather, what must end are unqualified appointments whose only real basis is political clout.

Surprisingly, however, there is one area in which more, not less, noncareer appointments make sense, and that is in Washington — in the top layer of the State Department's domestic leadership. This is a group that starts with the secretary and runs down through the deputy secretary, the undersecretaries, the assistant secretaries and the deputy assistant secretaries. It includes a number of their immediate aides and special assistants. While the professional staffs below this level should be immune from the invasion of outside appointments, this upper layer should have a higher percentage of outside appointees than is sometimes the case.

Why? To begin with, occupants of these positions work under close-at-hand supervision, which is not possible in the case of their more remotely positioned ambassadorial colleagues. Accordingly, failures and inadequacies are detected much earlier.

Second, it is the occupants of these key domes-tic posts who are called on to support the president and secretary of state in moments of contro-versy. This is a logical and proper role for politically appointed subordinates.

It is true that professional career diplomats have shown themselves willing to play this role too as part of their obligation to serve loyally whatever administration is in power. But it is not a particularly appropriate role for them, and when they do take on this responsibility their future usefulness is placed at risk because of the suspicion that attaches to them when a new administration arrives on the scene.

A further reason for bringing more noncareer appointees into these senior domestic ranks is that it gives the party in power an opportunity to that it gives the party in power an opposite develop a pool of experienced foreign policy leaders not only for itself but for future ad trations. Both parties need to develop far deeper reserves of diplomatic talent. This problem can be significantly remedied by using certain layers of the State Department as a training ground.

Each administration should seek to entice noncareer supporters into diplomatic work, but in the right way and by the right route. Unless they are especially qualified appointees of the Mansfield-Burns caliber, the noncareerist political types should not be sent abroad to run an embassy, where inexperience can be damaging. They should begin back home as supervised aides within the State Depositional's leadership ranks within the State Department's leadership ranks, where they can be trained, moved on to positions of growing responsibility and become part of an expanding pool of their party's foreign policy talent. From the most successful in this group should come the bulk of any administration's noncareer ambassadorial appointees. Pre-screened and experienced, they can add to the breadth and quality of U.S. efforts abroad.

The writer, now president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, was a political appointee in the State Department under Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon and Ford, and served as ambassador to Jordan and Turkey. He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Downdraft On Europe's Air Fares

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — Europe's airlines are proof that European industrial uncompetitiveness stems from more than technological decline. Since 1978 the air fares paid by business travelers in Europe have doubled in real terms. During that time U.S. deregulation has made some domestic flights in America cheaper than taking a Greyhound bus.

European governments and their protected "flag carrier" airlines are rightly coming under increasing pres-sure to liberalize their web of restrictive agreements. Competition from charter airlines for holiday business has already forced advanced booking economy schemes on the scheduled carriers, but most Europeans still fail to see why they should pay 25 cents a mile on, say, the Athens-London route, when some trans-Atlantic fares are now down to 5 cents a mile.

But the pressures that can be exerted by the traveling public are sadly unfocused, while national security and prestige are the trump cards played by those who resist deregulation. So it is in the face of bitter opposition from Europe's national airlines and almost all their parent governments that the EC Commission has renewed its attack on their price-fixing and pooling plans.

An earlier bid by Brussels to outlaw the airlines' most glaring antitrust abuses was shot down in flames several years ago, so the Eurocrats have compromised with a watered-down deregulation formula known as Memorandum No. 2. It contains a proposal for "fare zones" that would set minimum and maximum prices on air routes and leave the airlines to fight it out within those terms. The upper and lower limits in each zone would be comparable to those which for the past two years have into promising immunity from anti-operated on the North Atlantic trust prosecutions for British Airroutes. Supporters of the EC scheme say it would banish the fare-slashing, loss-inducing anarchy that had characterized the airlines' Battle of the Atlantic. Critics charge that it will mean precisely the same confusion and legal uncertainty that the hybrid form of deregulation has in fact introduced to the North Atlantic market. The British, French and U.S. governments are currently at logger-heads over its interpretation.

When small independent airlines call plaintively for freedom of the skies they do not mean total freedom. They mean the freedom enshrined in such treaties as the Bermuda 2 nact to compete on prices providing they are cost-related. What they do not mean is that the big national flag carriers should be free to cut their fares to uneconomical levels for as long as it takes to bankrupt their leaner, more efficient independent competitors.

The irony of independents such as Virgin Atlantic and People Express protesting against the bigger carriers' current round of price-cutting is nevertheless unmistakable. So, too, was the spectacle of Mrs. Thatcher's free-market government bullying the Reagan administration ways. Britain's worry was that its soon-to-be-denationalized airline could be vulnerable to further law suits charging it with the sort of "predatory pricing" collusion that allegedly bankrupted the original low-fare trailblazer, Laker Airways. All the signs are that six years of deregulation have forged and tempered U.S. airlines into an industry that can easily defend through greater efficiency its two-fifths share of the world's air traffic. In stark contrast, Europe's airlines remain the enemies of healthier competition. Now they are pleading that air safety and their steady 5- to 8-percent annual increases in traffic entail heavy investments that justify high prices. It is true that over the next decade the 135 airlines grouped in the International Air Transport Associa-tion will need $150 billion to $200 billion to buy more than 2,000 new aircraft. It is also true that this year they finally emerged from six years in the red with combined net earnings of only about $1.2 billion. The airlines do have a case to make. Yet their campaign against the limited deregulation of Memoran-dum No. 2 at times takes the breath away with its effrontery. Karl-Heinz Neumeister, secretary-general of the Association of European Airlines, recently testified to the EC's Economic and Social Committee as to why the fare zones plan is unacceptable. "Are antitrust laws applicable to air transport, when governments in Europe already control or own the airlines?" he asked, adding: "Obviously, anti-trust laws are a method of protecting the consumer from the potential or real excesses of private enterprise."

Only Britain and the Netherlands really favor the liberalization of air transport, witness their blessing for the super-competitive London-Mass-tricht service of Virgin Airways. Yet it is the French government's fanatical opposition to fare-slashing that has suddenly brought European deregulation within reach.

In a supreme irony, France's officious attempts to stamp out discounting may instead spell the end of re-strictive rules in the Community. An official prosecution before a Paris tribunal in September produced a surprisingly unnoticed milestone deci-sion. The French judge challenged the legality of waiving the EC compe-tition laws where airlines are con-cerned. He has referred his doubts about the airlines' exemption to the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg, which probably will deliver its opinion in mid-1985. If the EC court endorses the French tribunal's judg-ment, then the balloon really will go up in Europe's air fares war.

The Bold Chinese Experiment in Economic Reform

By Zhao Jinglun

DURHAM, North Carolina — China has entered a new phase of development of all-round reforms. It is extending the reforms from the countryside to the cities, and from agriculture to industry, trade, science and culture.

Deng Xiaoping, China's top leader, has characterized these reforms as a "revolution" because they amount not only to a negation of the Cultural Revolution and the Great Leap Forward but also to a rejection of the Soviet model, which China followed in the early 1950s with considerable success. The Chinese claim that by applying Marxist principles to Chi-nese realities they have found a specifically Chinese road to socialism. A key component of the current reform is a drastic modification of the planning method. This involves reducing the scope of the mandatory plan to include only items that are vital to the national interest and peonle's livelihood, such as the production of energy and basic raw materials, and the procurement (not production) of food grains, cotton and edible oils: enlarging the scope of the guidance plan to include the production of all major agricultural products, much of transportation and industries not subject to the mandatory plan; and leaving the service industries and the production of small commodities to market forces. The mandatory plan must be fulfilled. Targets under the guidance plan are to be met by means of economic levers such as prices, taxes and credits, and the production of some farm and sideline products and services are to be regulated by market demand. It is not market socialism but a mixed system with central planning and the market mechanism working side by side, and private and cooperative enterprises coexisting with state enterprises. The rejection of the Soviet model is nothing new; it started several years to improve performance.

The Chinese government will con-cern itself with macroeconomic goals ago. The Soviet model is characterized by a very high rate of investment, a priority on heavy industries (in-cluding defense) and a national po-licy of extremely limited imports. As and leave microeconomic decisionmaking to the enterprises. This is perhaps the boldest experiment ever attempted by a Marxist state.

To make all this work, China also must reform the wage-price structure. In an effort to readjust the econo-

Chinese planners have long recognized the crucial importance of wage-price reform. They have besitated to tackle it, however, because it involves grave risks. When government subsidies and controls are removed, prices tend to rise and this directly affects the people's livelihood.

Chinese planners now feel that the conditions are ripe for them to proceed cautiously with wage-price re-form by taking small incremental steps. Such complex reforms are bound to cause problems.

There already have been reports of a run on the banks as people scramble to stock up in anticipation of inflationary price spirals. But the Chinese leadership is confident that things will not get out of hand. China is not Poland, for example. Its economy is not in the doldrums. It has a respectable annual growth rate of about 8 percent, and growth has been relatively balanced.

As the economy improves, people's consumption patterns are changing. They now aspire to own television sets, washing machines and refrigera-tors. Deng Xiaoping's reforms must meet these rising expectations.

Indications so far are that the reforms are delivering the goods. They will create their own constituencies, and the chances are that they will overcome the resistance of those who stand to lose.

Capitalisms The Pastoral Reservations

Report (herisa)

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — In the past week, I have been across the United States, from Honolula to New York City, inspecting some of the 49 states President Reagan carried and meeting and answering questions from some of the people who re-elected him.
It is clear from their comments that the "savor the moment" spirit that produced his euphoric victory has survived the phony MiGs-to-Nicaragua scare cooked up by elements of the Reagan administration and the calculated leaks from David Stock-calculated lears from David Stock-man's budget office about horren-dous deficits lacing the government. The country and its citizens are determined to celebrate this Thanks-giving with unfurrowed brows and it possible, make the good times had through Christmas and New Year's Day. Time enough, then, to worry.

All this may help explain the rather churlish reaction to the pastoral letter churlish reaction to the pastoral letter released, in draft form, by a commit-tee of Roman Catholic bishops last week, in which they declared "moral-ly unacceptable" the degree of pover-ty, unemployment and economic in-equality existing in the United States and around the world these days.

From the brethren on the right, including George F. Will and William F. Buckley Jr., and the llons of laissez-faire on the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal, came cries of foul. Although they had not objected to the bishops preaching on matters of personal morality to individual candidates, they found fault with the church leaders speaking on issues of social morality to the society.

At the most unmannerly level, Mr. Buckley grumbled about the "lum-pen cliches" and "intellectual slovenliness" of the bishops' statement. At a slightly higher plane of discourse. Mr. Will said they sounded "like just another liberal lobby."

Why this outrage? The ostensible target of the criticism was the bishops' endorsement of a variety of welfare-state measures, whose usefulness is questioned not only by the conservatives but by politicians and economists of other ideological hues. The bishops called for steeper rates of progressivity in the income tax, higher minimum-wage and welfare levels and ambitious programs of public-service jobs for the hard-core unemployed - all of which are matters of egitimate policy debate.

But the re-election of Mr. Reagan has removed most of these measures from the list of current political options. The bishops can be criticized for being obtuse in their advocacy, but no one can seriously believe that the measures they endorsed are suddenly going to be embraced by this Congress or this administration. I think the conservatives' anger with the churchmen has a deeper orianr it ter unease at the shaky moral foundations of its own economics. The talisman of their economics is "growth."

They like that word better than
"greed" or "acquisitiveness," for the latter words clearly imply selfishness, while the former conjures up happy pictures of providing something for everyone. If the Pharaohs had had the Wall Street Journal's wise publicrelations counsel, they would have forgotten about pyramids and built their monuments in microchips.

Yet even these true believers are not prepared to defend unrestrained capitalism as a good in itself. As the Journal put it in its editorial enticizing the bishops' letter: "Modern capitalism is intended to serve the unique goals and needs of individuals ... [for] upward mobility. ... And the specific means to all these different personal goals is the individual freedom that capitalism provides in greater measure than any other system of economic organization."

That is the equation they would like to prove: Capitalism equals free-dom equals individual self-perfec-tion. If that is true, then the greater an individual's or nation's wealth, the closer to perfect happiness.

The bishops know better. In conformance with the doctrine and teachings of their faith, they assert that capitalism, like any other human institution, should be judged, not just on the criterion of freedom, but of justice and equality as well.

By those criteria, a system that produces — as the American system has in the past half-decade - greater poverty and greater inequality, must be found wanting. That is a hard message to swallow with the Thanksgiving turkey. It will not go down easily in the America I saw last week. Ronald Reagan was not re-elected by people who were questioning the ethic of take more, make more, spend more, get more If the bishops had just consulted with the "Tuesday Group" that did the Reagan campaign ads, they would have learned that "it's morning in America." And few people want to think about tomorrow. The Washington Post.

Trygve Bratteli, Ex-Prime Minister Of Norway, Dies

United Press Intern OSLO — Trygve Bratteli, 74, a labor leader who survived a Nazi death camp to become prime min-ister of Norway, died of a brain hemorrhage Tuesday at an Osle hospital, officials said. Mr. Bratteli, who began his career as a coal miner, rose to lead a Labor government from March 1971 to September 1972, when he resigned after failing to bring Norway into the European Communi-ry.

He was returned to power after 1973 and elections in September 1973 and served as prime minister of the Labor government until October 1976 when he handed over the office to a fellow Laborite, Odvar Nordli.

The death of Mr. Bratteli has removed one of Norway's best known figures of World War II, when he played a central role in the resistance movement after the German attack and occupation.

Syria Seeks to Moderate Policies of Iran, Others

By Ihsan A. Hijazi New York Times Service

BEIRUT — Syria is seeking to persuade Iran to moderate its policies on several Middle East issues and to prevail upon its followers in the region to do the same, according to Arab diplomats and some press reports here.

The Arab diplomats said that President Hafez al-Assad was seeking Iranian cooperation to end the four-year war with Iraq and improve relations between Iran and France. He also is believed to be seeking Iran's support for the troop withdrawal negotiations between Lebanon and Israel that resumed last week.

Vice President Abdel Halim Khaddam of Syria returned to Damascus on Sunday after a 24-hour visit to Tehran, where he is said to have delivered a message from President Assad to Iran's president, Ali Khamenei.

mutual interest.

Farouk al-Sharaa, the Syrian forign minister, who accompanied Mr. Khaddam to Tehran, was reported to be in the Saudi capital, Riyadh, on Tuesday for talks with his Saudi counterpart, Prince Saud al-Faisal. He was expected to brief Saudi leaders on the results of the talks in Tehran.

Syria is Iran's main ally in the Arab world, having sided with Tehran against Iraq in the Gulf war. There is no love lost between President Assad and President Saddam Hussein of Iraq. But the diplomats said that Damascus has been asked by its other Arab allies, notably Saudi Arabia, to use its good offices with the Iranians so they may agree to a negotiated end to the war with Iraq.

Tehran has said it will not consider a peace settlement until President Hussein has been removed from power. The Syrians earlier this year failed to persuade Iran's leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, to change that position.

The fresh Syrian initiative is on the eve of the annual conference of the six members of the Gulf Cooperation Council. The leaders of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates and Oman are scheduled to meet in Kuwait on Nov. 27 to discuss problems affecting their security. Most of these problems stem from the Iraq-Iran war, which has endangered the oil routes.

A Kuwaiti newspaper, Al-Seyassa, said Tuesday that it had learned that Syria was trying to mend fences between France and Iran. In an item quoted on Arab radio stations, the newspaper said the Damascus government has been in contact with Tehran and Paris in an attempt to improve relations between the two countries. The item, which did not quote specific sources, said that President Assad's message to President Khamenei dealt with that question.

Syria has improved its own relations with France. President François Mitterrand is scheduled to visit Syria on Thursday.

Relations between France and Iran have been strained over what Tehran regards as Paris's policies biased in favor of Baghdad. A constant supply of French weapons to Iraq, including Super Etendard fighter jets and Exocet air-to-surface missiles, seems to have kept the overall military balance in the war on Iraq's side. French institutions, soldiers and

The 'Third Wave' of Japanese Designers

By Gloria Noda

TOKYO - On the volatile Japanese fashion scene, where the design industry is still in adolescent freedom in comparison to the West, designers can be divided into two groups: those who do international styling, and very Japanese designers who are preoccupied with fabric and texture.

In this fast-changing climate, several new designers are beginning to make their mark, as was evident in their recent spring showings in Tokyo. The showings sponsored by the nonprofit Fashion Foundation with government support, featured 12 young designers who to-gether were labeled the "third

Howard Brenton one thing to have Mother Courage pulling a cart. It is quite another to has brilliantly avoided the usual Hollywood trap ("Morning Byron How's Shelley" and "Has anyone seen Willie Wordsworth?") and instead given us a waspishly comic look at two men who set out to change ohe world and ended up by destroying their own families. "What do you scribbling pets have in common?" asks Shelley's misfalling off. This is not actually a tress (Fiona Shaw in a wonderfully imperious performance). "You all go to bed with your sisters."

One of Brenton's many insights into the two great 19th-century British romantic poets is that although apparently highly contrasted (Byron the self-seeking selfish libertine Shelley the socialist idealist) they had a great deal more in common with each other than with anyone else. Both were catastrophically destructive in their romantic among the leading fans of Sir Peter Hall's administration at the Narelationships, both loathed Wordsworth ("serious but a bit of a bitch") and both had only the haziest notion of the politics they were supposed to be fighting for. Both drifted around Italy strewing the landscape with bastards and bills, and each had a healthy appreciation of the theatricality of the other: "Are we going out?" asks Byron of Shelley at one point in a marathon poetic debate "or are you just going to fall about in another visionary fit?"

> Wars of liberation are being fought as they agonize over who gets to sleep with whose mistress, and what is so splendid about Brenton's play is the way it allies that comic despair with a very real awareness of the deaths they seemed both to embrace and to cause. As children expire and wives jump into the lake, however, it is Shelley the idealist who causes far more domestic destruction than Byron the rake. There's a moral in there somewhere.

Children of Indochina Determined to Build New Life in America

By Robert Coles

(Robert Coles is professor of psychiatry and

Elementary School in Arlington, Virginia, in response to an inquiry about how the Cambodian, the Laotian, the Vietnamese boys and girls were managing in their classes. When pressed for details, she speaks with assurance and out of conviction. "They are eager to learn. They are considerate and well behaved. They are good citizens in our community."

The teachers in the school say many of the same things. They emphasize how polite, courteous, obliging, alert these "refugee children" are. In Nancy McCracken's class of students for whom English is a second language, children 7, 8 and 9 years of age, most originally from Southeast Asia, are learning how to read. The favorable comments come to mind again and again as one watches these children go about their school day, eager to master spelling, to learn how to add and subtract and multiply When they salute the American flag, when they pledge allegiance to the United States of America, they speak with a telling earnestness that surprises, maybe embarrasses, a visitor.

She told us we can't fight back. She told us we might be next. We waited, but nothing happened. They had others to kill. There aren't enough bullets, sometimes, for murderers to kill everyone they want to kill."

IKE so many others, he walked and walked and walked to escape the Khmer Rouge.

Now he does another kind of walking. "We get tired of waiting for the ice cream man to come to our street, so we go sometimes to try to find him. These children, she says, have gone through devastating experiences. They've food or clean water to escape death. They've been on the sea for days - the 'boat people.' They've been sick and near death. They come here, to a faraway land, and most of them don't know any English. You'd think they'd be frightened and exhausted. You'd think they'd be suspicious and withdrawn. But they get right to work, and they smile and are polite, and they are determined to build a good life for themselves bere, and they are willing to work hard, and if you, the teacher, make them work even harder, they're grateful."

But children cannot forever dissemble emotionally. No wonder a girl draws a helicopter black and shows its bombs and prosmarched with their parents for miles with no trate bodies in a field below. No wonder a boy gives a man with a rifle the huge, prominent teeth of a devouring animal.

> No wonder, too, child after child, when asked what happened in Vietnam, in Cambodia, in Laos, will mention "bad people." And when asked to spell out the nature of the badness, they will speak as one 9-year-old boy did while sitting on a low wall, behind his South Frederick Street home: "There was the government. No one could decide anything by himself. My father said we had to leave, because the government would kill anyone who didn't get down on his knees and beg to be a slave.

"If you asked the government why, you'd be on your way to jail, or they'd come and shoot

"I remember, I remember then, I remember us to get out. Then he told us how he leved his village, but he was glad we'd escaped. And then knew he was gone."

HOSE are sad words. They speak of a terrible 20th century tragedy. Yet, they are words that convey fierce pride, an unyielding determination — handed bravely from parent to child, and remembered constantly, it seems, no matter the thousands of miles between there and here, the thousands of days between then and now.

For these children there have been many moments of anxiety, apprehension, regret, even despair. They have endured persecution, exile, hunger, the loss of parents, relatives, friends. Sometimes there are bad dreams, moments a particular child may describe tersely, but tellingly: "I wake up and I realize I've been back e, and they're trying to kill us, all of us, the soldiers are." Still, that girl is soon enough back to sleep: "I'm tired, and so I don't stay awake

The 8-year-old child also asks questions asking him why he was happy, and he said about English words and phrases, U.S. history because he was sure I'd make it, and my brother, and geography, the reason for the stars and red and my sisters, and that was all he wanted, for and white bars on the American flag. What does she mean by that comparison? She hasn't the slightest difficulty being clear and specific: "There would be more food. You could have a school like this one here. The teachers wouldn't be scared, and we wouldn't be scared, the kids. No one would be scared of the govern-

Moreover, the purents of these children, no less anxious to become adjusted to the United States, to enjoy its possibilities, are as industrious and yet caring mothers and fa-thers as I've seen anywhere in the world.

A boy nearby has been listening and nodding as I talk to the girl who would like to be a nurse or even a doctor. He makes a declaration: There should be more friends everywhere."

He adds force to his statement by pointing to the map of the world on the classroom wall With a sweep of his hand he moves over the planet's territory. # Arab and Israeli Buses Share a Highway, Equally Open to Ambushes on West Bank

By Dan Fisher Los Angeles Times Service

ERUSALEM - This is the story of two buses that travel a common highway in the service of different worlds. The most important thing they share besides the Hebron

Road is their vulnerability to national hatred. Bus No. 60 of the Egged Transportation Co. carries Jews from a terminal in West Jerusalem

West Bank.
Bus No. 23 of the Hebron National Bus Co. carries Arabs from a terminal in East Jerusalem to Siir, a Palestinian Arab village of 3,000 peo-

On Sept. 17, the No. 60 bus was ambushed "didn't make me happy," but she showed little soon after it left Jerusalem. The driver and four sympathy for the victims. passengers were wounded in a hail of automatic-rifle fire, which also injured two Arabs who were traveling in a car behind the bus. No one has been charged with the citael bus. No one has been charged with the attack, but Arab terrorists have claimed responsibility.

On Oct. 28, the No. 23 bus was ambushed before it cleared the Jerusalem city limits. One passenger was killed and 10 others were wounded when an anti-tank rocket fired from a nearby hillside struck the bus just above the rear door. On Nov. 15, an 18-year-old Israeli soldier, David Ben Hanina Ben Shimol, was indicted and charged with murder in connection with the incident. He was quoted as saying he attacked the bus to avenge the slaying of two Jewish students by an Arab. The two attacks were bloody reminders that no nationality has a corner on extremism and that the targets of terror need be guilty of nothing but their origins. A reporter traveled on both buses the other day and talked with people who ride them regularly. Each group of passengers' views of the people on the other bus - and of the land that one side rules but both consider home - appeared to be hardening. ASSENGERS on the Jewish bus, No. 60, which leaves Jerusalem at 6:45 P.M. for Kiryat Arba, were mostly of European origin. Most of the men wore knitted skullcaps; most of the women wore headscarves.

They see themselves as the true successors of the Zionist pioneers, as settlers of land that, under international law, is considered occupied. although they insist it is an integral part of Eretz Israel, the biblical Land of Israel.

They resent being targets - either of the Arabs who throw stones at their buses and cars along the Hebron Road and who have killed eight Jews in Hebron in the last five years, or of what they see as a hostile press, which depicts them as fanatics and as a barrier to peace in the David Berkovic, 54, started driving the route just after his predecessor, Avi Reuven, lost his right eye in the September ambush. Mr. Berkogers were for the most part day laborers returnvic, who lives in Jerusalem, concedes that he worries about the dangers of his job.

"We have to be careful," he said. "Sometimes the Arabs throw stones."

What difference did he see, if any, between the attacks on the two buses? "You cannot compare the two cases," the student said. "Because my feeling for the Jew is stronger, even when I think he's wrong, I still feel closer to him."

Eliezer Chabra, 27, was a passenger on the bus when it was ambushed.

"The minute I heard the shots, I bent down," he said. "Women and children were screaming. I took out my pistol. I opened the window and fired two shots in the air just to show that there were firearms on the bus."

For Mr. Chabra, a career soldier who moved to Kiryat Arba with his wife and two children just a week before the incident, it was a frightening welcome to a new life. But attacking Arab buses, he said, is not the way to solve the problem "because they're also innocent people." He continued: "But always, when something like the murder happens, somebody generalizes and says an Arab did it, and all Arabs are

In Kiryat Arba, as the reporter waited for a who had lost an eye in the bus ambush, hap-

WO weeks earlier, he said that he thought Arab and Jew could live together. "I used to stay with Arabs," he said, towards us."

Zehava Nativ, one of the original Jewish settlers in the Hebron area after the Six-Day War of 1967, asked: "Why don't we see you after something happens to us? Why only after something happens to us? Why only after something happens to the Arab but?"

Let. I used to stay with Arab, he said, "and I have Arab guests often in Hebron."

But now his wound was troubling him and when he was asked about the attack on the Arab but, he replied: "It's good that it happened. It's not right that they should drive in full security and we not."

gers were for the most part day laborers returning to their village, most of them in their 20s or late teens. There were only two women.

These people feel they are victims of an occupation that makes them second-class citizens of the place where they were born. They were less willing to talk about Arab terrorism than the Jews had been to talk about Jewish terrorism. Several said they were not aware that the Jewish bus had been ambushed, although the incident was reported in the Arabic-language press.

Abdul-Razao Hussein, who has been driving the route for eight months, said he was worried and frightened all the time. He said Jews often throw things at the bus as it passes their settle-

Kamel Essa, 24, a kitchen helper at an East Jerusalem hotel, was slightly injured in the rock-et attack and his wife was cut by flying metal. He said that such attacks must be stopped but added that he had no idea how to do it. He does know, he said, that the Arabs are "under occupation" and that the Jews "keep attacking us in

"Since I was born," said Mohammed Fanash, gious school—in Kiryat Arba, said he carries a weapon, but "with deep regret." The Israeli have lived here all my life, and spent most of my life in humiliation."

Mr. Fanash said he works as a laborer and spends a third of his pay on transportation.

Asked if Arabs and Jews can live together here, Mr. Fanash said: "I don't know. The truth is in the heart of Allah, and not me and not you can know what will happen."

S Bus No. 23 approached the Dehaishe A refugee camp, it was stopped at a barri-cade manned by Israeli troops and forced to detour on a narrow, winding mountain road behind the camp. Youths at the camp had stoned a passing Israeli vehicle that morning and the camp was under curfew. The No. 60 bus had been allowed through the roadblock, as were other vehicles with yellow Israeli license

To the passengers on Bus No. 23, it was another example of discrimination and their comments became sharper.

Talking is useless," said a man who appeared to be in his 20s. "It won't affect anything. People pay lip service so they'll feel better. But nothing happens, Nobody can solve it —only the Palestinians." Another said: "We shouldn't be afraid to say

Another put in. "Nobody wornes about what happens to us Palestinians except the PLO"— the Palestine Liberation Organization.

As the bus passed a new Jewish settlement north of Hebron, the passengers were asked what would happen to such a settlement in a Palestinian state

"I hope they leave it for Palestinians," one "They can keep living here," another said.

United Press Internations NEW YORK — The New York stock market snapped a lengthy losing streak Tuesday with its first solid advance in 10 sessions. Analysts said the rebound was a "normal evolution" after a prolonged side.

The Development industrial average which fell

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 2.65 Monday, jumped 9.83 to 1,195.12. The Dow had been down more than 58 points in nine sessions starting the day after the election.

Advances topped declines 822-703. Volume totaled 83.2 million shares, up from the 69.7 million traded Monday.

The market's gain was a "normal evolution from a sharp decline," said investment adviser Robert J. Nurock of Paoli, Pennsylvania. He raid the steek market had you up too rapidly. said the stock market had run up too rapidly prior to the election, and consequently "volatili-ty on the downside was telescoped."

Harry Laubscher of Paine, Webber said strength in bonds helped the stock market. He noted that institutional investors were only moderately active in Tuesday's advance.

Concern about a slowdown in the rate of economic growth and the Reagan administration's response to a growing federal budget deficit weighed on investors. One piece of positive news for the stock market would be a further lowering of interest rates. Some analysts expect the Federal Reserve to reduce the discount rate from the current 9 percent.

Federal funds rates slipped to 9 percent late in the day, down from 9½ percent Tuesday.
Harry Villec of Sutro & Co. said he wasn't surprised by the rebound. He said the possibili-ty of a reduction in the discount rate and the tive trading. CBS lost % to 76%. CBS has agreed prospects for brisk retail sales during the Christ- to purchase 12 consumer magazines.

Managers Can Find Rewards Imports of Guiding Troubled Firms

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribune

ARIS — "We've just had a goodbye party for the bank-ruptcy lawyers," says Sanford C. Sigoloff, chairman and chief executive officer of Wickes Cos., which has almost completed reorganization as part of one of the largest bankruptcy cases in U.S. corporate history.

Mr. Sigoloff was in Paris for a three-day vacation, his first since Wickes filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code in April 1982. For those at the top, creditors a 11 S. corporate through the largest transfer as the conguiding a U.S. company through bankruptcy proceedings can be a grueling but rewarding experience.

Mr. Sigoloff is going to receive a $3.6 million to $4.5 million bonus for taking Wickes from a company that was having total losses of nearly $500 million in the two years proceding.

of the Atlantic.

lion in the two years preceding bankruptcy law procedures to one that will show a modest profit this year.

Chapter 11 looks Earlier this fall, a federal like a good deal.

bankruptcy judge approved
Wickes reorganization plan.
It is the U.S. retail chain's first step on its way out of Chapter 11.
Wickes has subsidiaries in West Germany, Britain and the Netherlands. If all goes according to plan, Wickes will emerge from Chapter 11 protection at the end of January 1985.
Under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code of 1978, companies in trouble are protected from creditors' lawsuits and given time to reorganize. With the rise in insolvencies in France, Britain and West Germany, European industries have been pushing their governments to change existing bankruptcy laws which they say encourage company liquidations (and job losses) rather than reorganizations rather than reorganizations.

From this side of the Atlantic, Chapter 11 looks like a good deal. However, in seeking reform of British and French bankrupt-cy laws, its detractors wonder whether Chapter 11 is the right legal model for European lawmakers to emulate.

Some U.S. companies, notably Wilson Foods Corp. and Continental Airlines, have been accused of using Chapter 11 to break labor contracts. Others sought protection from products liability lawsuits, such as Manville Corp., which filed for protection under Chapter II in part because of thousands of asbestos-related claims against it.

"I think their exceptional uses of Chapter 11 that wouldn't be tried again," says Mr. Sigoloff.

By all accounts, the Wickes reorganization plan proves that Chapter 11 can work to the benefit of the remaining 150,000 creditors, the banks shareholders and employees. Under the reorganization plan approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Los Angeles. Wickes will cettle about $1.25 billion of debt over Los Angeles, Wickes will settle about $1.25 billion of debt over the next five years through a combination of cash, notes and new share issues. The first cash payment of $299 million is due in December. The most senior classes of debt holders will get more than 90 cents on the dollar, others will get between 80 cents and 96 cents to the dollar and the most junior debt holders will get 55 cents on the dollar.

Wickes' successful emergence from Chapter 11 proceedings is due in large part to Mr. Sigoloff and his tough management style.

He is a veteran of large corporate bankruptcies, having guided Daylin Inc., a Los Angeles-based retailer, through a 1½-year bankruptcy reorganization in the mid-1970s.

Dubbed "Ming the Merciless," Mr. Sigoloff took on the Wickes job in March 1982, a month before the Chapter 11 filing. He soon decided major surgery was needed. With his team, he sold or closed 15 Wickes divisions reducing annual revenue from $4 billion to $3 billion. That meant laying off about 10,000 employees, cutting the staff from 38,000 employees to 28,000 employees. But it also meant saving 28,000 jobs. The corporate staff was cut from 400 to 100.

In the Wickes experience, the toughest management problems were getting the banks to lend more money and getting employees to work long hours.

Most creditors, particularly suppliers, have an interest in their clients staying affoat. The same isn't true of the banks. "The banks say you're causing me to put reserves on my books," says (Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

U.S. Halts EC Pipe

Ban Effective Until Dec. 31

By Carl Hartman

WASHINGTON — U.S. customs agents have been ordered to halt imports of steel pipes and tubes from the 10 European Com-munity countries from Nov. 29 to the end of the year, an assistant U.S. trade representative said

Charles Blum said EC ministers will meet Thursday in Brussels to discuss the issue, and the U.S. halt in imports may be altered if they offer a plan to the United States."

Mr. Blum said the stoppage of imports was ordered because of a large increase in imports from Eu-rope. He refused to speculate on what the Europeans might offer after their Thursday meeting.

His comments followed a confusing series of reports from the U.S. Trade Representative's office, the Commerce Department and the EC trade delegation in Washing-

Initial reports of a temporary halt in imports were disputed by Desiree Tucker, a spokeswoman for the Trade Representative's of-fice. She said the United States instead was limiting imports to 5.9 instead was limiting imports to 5.9 percent of the U.S. market for steel pipes and tubes during the Nov. 29-Dec. 31 period.

Federal authorities are under ressure from the domestic steel industry to curb imports as a way to preserve steel orders and jobs in the United States. President Ronald Reagan has pledged to keep steel imports down to 20 percent of the U.S. market this year.

Under an exchange of letters in 1982 between Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Etienne Davignon, then the European Community's commissioner for industry, imports of steep pipes and tubes from EC countries were to be held to 5.9 percent of the U.S. mar-mills were trying to get around agreed limits on other steel products by switching to pipes and

An EC official who spoke only on condition that she not be identified said European exports of pipes and tubes to the United States by the end of August already had topped 14 percent of the expected U.S. market for the entire year.

This official, however, insisted there had been no European diver-sion to pipes and tubes. She attributed the rise in European exports to market conditions.

European shipments of pipes and tubes totaled 470,000 tons worth $250 million last year, she said, and the total rose to 926,000 tons for the first eight months of 1984. She had no dollar value for this year's shipments.

Suddenly Prominent After Price Cut, Statoil Finds It Has Lesson to Learn

Until recently, foreign oil traders and journalists blithely ignored such essentials of Norwegian oil politics. Then came Statoil's surprise decision last month to cut prices. In spite of themselves, the Norwegians have assumed a prominent role in oil

The price cut was a departure from Norway's habit of follow-ing the lead of Britain, which produces three times as much oil. The results were not auspicious. Most oil executives here and in Oslo agree that Statoil handled the price cut clumsily. Some contend that the form chosen for the cut inflicted unnecessary psychological damage on a weak market, hurting Norway's longterm interests.

"This was quite a new situa-tion for us," Kare Kristiansen, the energy minister, a former state-railroad executive, who does not particularly resemble

Because the country's oil and gas industry took off in the 1970s just as oil prices were doing the same, however, Norway put less emphasis on marketing.

U.S. Requires IBM to Sell Part of ROLM

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Justice Department gave its approval Tuesday to International Business Machines Corp.'s $1.25billion acquisition of ROLM Corp. after IBM agreed to sell ROLM's military-computer business.

Under the agreement in 2 proposed consent decree filed in U.S. District Court, IBM promised to divest itself of ROLM's Mil-Spec Computer Division within six months. Last year, ROLM made about 50 percent of all computers designed to meet rigorous military specifications.

The Justice Department con-tended that IBM's acquisition of ROLM could dramatically lessen competition for mil-spec [mil-tary-specification] commercial-based computers." Assistant Attorney General J.

Paul McGrath of the Antitrust Division said that ROLM and Norden Systems Inc., a division of United Technologies Corp., accounted for more than 80 percent of the total annual domestic sales of such computers annually from 1980 to 1983 and that ROLM's military-specification computer sales last year were $75 million about half the total for such com-

"The production and sale of milspec commercial-based computers is a highly concentrated business," the department said in a competitive-impact statement filed with the court. "There are substantial barriers to beginning production and sale of mil-spec commercial-based computers."

The complaint said IBM had in-dicated to the military that it planned to start taking orders for military computers in 1985.

IBM issued a statement from its headquarters in Armonk, New York, saying that it disagreed with the Justice Department's contention but that it agreed to the divestiture so it could go ahead with the acquisition of ROLM.

The consent decree is to become final after a 60-day period for pub-If IBM does not sell the military-computer division in the six-month period, a proposed final judgment filed with the court provides that a trustee will sell it. According to the court papers.

IBM agreed to maintain the Mil-Spec Computer Division as a separate entity until it is sold.

The Justice Department noted that before their merger agreement, the two companies agreed last year that IBM could acquire 30 percent of ROLM stock and that IBM actually owns 23 percent. "Although the department reviewed the acquisition in 1983, it was not then aware of the expected entry of IBM into the mil-spec commercial-based computer mar-ket," the department said.

Dollar Rises In Europe, New York

NEW YORK — The dollar shot above the key 3-Deutsche-mark level Tuesday despite the report of weak U.S. gross national product figures and lower interest rates.

Gold prices were little changed. "The market just decided to dis-regard the GNP and the softer Fed funds [overnight rate] and take the dollar up," said Earl Johnson, vice president at Chicago's Harris Bank. "The market psychology is turning bullish in spite of everything telling it the opposite."

All indicators seem to call for a weaker dollar. Interest rates have dropped sharply in the past two months — the Fed funds fell to 914 percent Tuesday - partly in response to an effort by the Federal Reserve to pump up money growth and keep the U.S. economic recovery going.

The record federal budget and trade delicits have been there all through the dollar's surge to record and near-record high levels this year. But the weakening economy has brought the market's focus on discouraging prospects of narrowing either deficit. In late European trading, the pound weakened in London to $1,238 from $1,2495 Monday, In Frankfurt, the dollar rose to 2.9955 Deutsche marks, up from 2,9755 the day before. In Paris the dollar gained to 9.188 francs from 9.139 on Monday. In late New York trading, the dollar gained to 3.0063 DM from 2.9923 on Monday. The U.S. currency also rose to 9.2155 francs from 9.178 the day before, while the pound declined to $1,2393 from $1.2495 on Monday.

France Posts October Trade Deficit

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches PARIS -- France's foreign trade account plunged back into deficit in October with a 3.39-billion-franc ($369-million) seasonally adjusted shortfall. It was the first trade delicit in three months. The deficit, announced Tuesday, follows a 477-million-franc surplus in September and compares with an 893-million-franc deficit in Oc-

The Foreign Trade Ministry said in a prepared statement that the deficit was due to "a substantial increase in imports." It said energy imports had remained stable, but increased investment had prompted a rush on imports, particularly of heavy equipment.

After seasonal adjustment, October imports rose about 6 percent to 77.19 billion francs, the figures show. Exports rose 0.7 percent

Mr. Reagan, citing "foreign po-licy reasons," ordered the U.S. Justice Department to drop its grand jury investigation of possible antitrust violations by airlines flying trans-Atlantic routes.

Sources close to the investigation said it focused on the 1982 collapse of Sir Freddie Laker's cut-rate service between the United States and Britain. The liquidator of Laker Airways has filed a billion-dollar civil antitrust suit against several British and U.S. airlines for allegedly trying to force the airline out of business by lowering their fares to match its bargain prices. When the major U.S. and British carriers tried twice this fall to offer cut-rate trans-Atlantic fares, the British government balked, saying it would not approve the new prices unless it was given U.S. assurances that its airlines would be not be subject to future antitrust scrutiny.

At least one major customer warned Statoil that the move would panic a market already weakened let customers continue to buy at least a small part of their supplies at the old official price, preserving appearances. Statoil declined to discuss the matter in detail but suggested that some of its customers would reject such a maneuver.

Two days later, the price cut leaked to the press. Britain and Nigeria quickly chimed in with deeper price cuts, and OPEC was forced to call an emergency meeting and promise to choke back on production.

Statoil, all the while, seemed amazed that the outside world should attach such significance to a price cut that merely matched openly the veiled discounts of other producers. "The market was looking for someone to blame," reasoned Statoil's Mr. Olsen.

Looking further ahead, Statoil aims to improve its flexibility. A refinery expansion at Mongstad due for completion in 1989, will provide storage capacity, allowing Statoil more room to defer sales when buyers balk. In addition, the expansion will allow Statoil to sell more of its oil in the form of gasoline, jet fuel and other products, sometimes easier to unload than crude. Statoil already rents a small amount of refinery capacity in the Netherlands to produce products. Some oilmen say Norway should move aggressively to acquire refineries, gasoline stations and other marketing outlets in continental Europe or the United States, That would match the strategy of Ku-

"It is quite without reason to think that we could be decisive" in setting price trends, Mr. Kristiansen, the energy minister, explained.

"At the moment people are watching us closely, yes," said Mr.
Olsen, "but for how long?"

RIDE A PALE HORSE

By Helen MacInnes. 350 pp. $15.95. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 757 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Maude McDaniel

T HIS is 1984, so the villains must be Communists. One of the most topical of all spy novelists, Helen Maclinnes has kept up with the news ever since her first novel "Above Suspicion" in 1941 featured Nazis in the role of despicable dastards, In that respect, "Ride a Pale Horse" is no exception. Neither will it break the record of her 20 previous novels, all of which were best sellers and remain in print. But "Pale Horse" is just one more rearrangement of standardized parts. The old weaknesses — paper people and a jerry-built style — are magnified, and the old strengths — colorful travelogues and riveting suspense — are eroded.

Karen Cornell is 37, widowed, beautiful and wears linen a lot. She's an up-and-coming American reporter in Czechoslovakia covering an international peace convention, is contacted by Josef Vasek, a KGB colonel who plans to defect and passes along several Russian forger-ies to underline his importance to the West. He also mentions the existence of a mole in the CIA, without, however, naming him.

No doubt this was meant to set up an extended suspense element in the story, but the turncoats (there are three of them) are fingered quite early in the game and without much in the way of detective ingenuity. This leaves Vasek's ulterior motives as the only puzzle left. and they turn out to be more complicated but less exciting than the original documented threat, which at least involved starting a nuclear war. The biggest surprise in the story, in fact, is that there are no real surprises.

There is love, of course. There's always love in a MacInnes book, and here it sparks between Karen and Peter Bistow, a genuine, good-guy. CIA disinformation expert, who takes over the action and the brainwork from Karen halfway into the book. He saves her from terrorist assassination, whereupon she retires to his Washington apartment for the remainder of the story. Aside from a girlish shot into the ceiling when the Communist agents invade, she takes very little effective part in the rest of the proceedings except to preoccupy Peter's spare moments.

ics complain about are rather charming in contrast to much of spy fiction, which has become heavy-breathing and almost amoral. She has never been in doubt as to whose side she's on. (Her political conservatism seems less preachy in this book than in some past ones, but no less pronounced.) She has never exploited sex or ladled out unnecessary horror or violence.

So it is not Maclanes's old-fashioned qualities that dishearten, but a new fatigue that seems to invade these pages, a kind of enervation that shows in banal conversation, perfunctory descriptions and the kind of backward plotting that seems to work retroactively from the known facts of the conclusion to dictate which of the several options a character will choose in a given situation. For a reader moving the opposite way, many of these directions. and intuitions seem arbitrary and without motivation. Despite the tortuous intrigue and promising material - Prague, Vienna, Rome, the peculiar Russian art form of disinformation — "Ride a Pale Horse" really does not carry its weight. The title comes from the Book of Revelation: "And I looked, and behold a pale horse: And his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him."

Well, that seems a little severe. Let's just say that Macinnes has done better before.

Maude McDamel, a writer from Cumberland Maryland, wrote this review for The Washington

The tall and tacitum right-hander, who turned 20 last Friday, became the youngest player ever to win the award. He also became the fourth member of the Mets to win, and the second in a row as he surpassed even the runaway vote scored last year by Darryl Straw- NHL Standings berry.

Gooden received 23 of the 24 first-place votes cast by the Baseball Writers Association of Ameriation members from each city in N.Y. Romers the league The city in N.Y. The reason for the landslide was no mystery: No rookie in baseball history ever struck out more bat-ters, and no pitcher in the big Microsoft leagues struck out more this year. Toronto Gooden, who won 17 games and Detroit lost 9, fanned 10 or more batters in a game 15 times.

Gooden struck out 276 batters in 218 innings, breaking the rookie record of 245 set in 1955 by Herb Score, of the Cleveland Indians. That mark fell on Sept. 12 when Gooden struck out 16 batters, three short of the major league record for one game, against Pittsburgh.

He also broke the major-league record for strikeout ratio, fanning an average of 11.39 batters per nine innings. The old record was 10.71 by Cleveland's McDowell in 1965.

Award voting. Gooden spent three years in the minors before joining the Mets from their Class-A team in Lynchburg, Virginia. With a fastball clocked conservatively at 93 miles an hour (150 kph) and a parabolic curpaball Conden had the abuniant curveball, Gooden had the physical tools ("Slang for a curveball is 'Un-cle Charlie,' " said television com-mentator Joe Garigiola. "Gooden's should be named 'Sir Charles' ").

But he also came prepared mentally. "A lot of kids don't realize Eiler what they have until they've been around a few years," said Met pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre.

Edwords

Reflecting on his rookie season, Gooden said: "I still can't believe goucherd Gosselle all the nice things that happened to me. At this time last year, I wasn't even on the Mets' roster. I was just hoping to win a spot in spring training. I didn't know if they'd send me back to Triple-A."

He said three achievements stood out in his mind: "The onehitter I pitched against the Cubs, making the All-Star team and win-ning this award."

Of next year and the so-called sophomore jinx, he said: "I don't agree with that con much. That comes from putting too much pressure on yourself. I'll combat that by picking up where I left off and working on some weaknesses." The only first-place vote Gooden lid not get was cast for Samuel by Dave Nightingale of The Sporting Yews, who explained that he usualy rated a "position" player, or ev-ry-day player, over a pitcher. Sometimes, in all innoceace, soccer kicks back hard. I doubt, forexample, that Turgut Ozal, the prime minister of Turkey, will ever think of the game as an opiate to soothe the masses.

On the morning of last week's World Cup-qualifier mismatch with England in Istanbul, Ozal put into power by the military and trying to govern a fragile democracy, with its austerity measures and alleged torture among 20,000 political prisoners — hitched his star to the sporting wagon.

The front page of Istanbul's leading daily blazed his message: that "our national pride is at stake when we play against a country of England's reputation."

As a soccer fanatic, he called for courage and patriotism; the crowd of 40,000 had been primed by aging cheerleaders into a boisterous chorus heard half a mile away in England's hotel two hours before kickoff.... Humiliation followed: Turkey 0, England 8.

Ali Sharp in Workout — With Press

By Michael Katz New York Times Service from reporters were always his best medicine. And as the 65-minute interview warmed up and the questions got tougher, Mubammad Ali got sharper. The 42-year-old Ali was in town Monday for the first time since his three-day hospitalization two months ago for tests that showed the three-time heavyweight champion was suffering from the symptoms of Parkinson's syndrome. The slurred speech, the unsteady walk, the overall fatigue that permeated his appearance were all there as he sat in the Downtown Athletic Club with a dozen reporters.

He posed with the Heisman Trophy, which he almost fum-bled, and he mugged while re-ceiving the club's Rocky Marciano Award. And he talked, at first softly and unclearly and then louder and funnier. Talking always made him feel better.

Doctors at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital prescribed a combination of the drugs Sinemet and Symmetrel three times a day for his symptoms. Said Ali:
"They told me what I need to do" — not that he does it.

"All he's got to do is take the medicine and he'll be all right," said Herbert Muhammad, his longtime manager. That's the problem. He doesn't always take

"Do you feel any better than the last time you were here?" he was asked.

"I felt good then," he whispered. "I never felt better in my life. I've got no pain."

He said the Marciano award for being a champion in and out of the ring, was a "big honor." "I remembered as a kid watching all those guys fight," he said.
"It's a big honor to be ranked with them."

Someone wanted to know if he thought his successor as heavy-weight champion, Larry Holmes, should retire, "I can't advise no one to retire because I didn't," he

He was asked why he continued fighting, unsuccessfully challenging Holmes in 1980 and losing to Trevor Berbick in another comeback attempt in 1981.
"In my case, I believed I had enough to beat Holmes and Berbick," he said. "But you don't believe it 'til you try it. I figured I knew myself better than you." Did he have any regrets about continuing to fight? "No."

Not even after the battering he took from Holmes? "I tried to get the title for the fourth time.

Someone asked him what he thought of Holmes. "I have nothing to say about Larry but good," Ali replied. "He's great, he's undefeated."

What about your next fight, someone joked, and Ali sat up, suddenly interested. "Funny you should mention that. I've got this king [promoter Don King, presumably) who's going to put up $20 million in Estonia, Russia." Who's the opponent? Ali pre-

The Bulls, who have lost three straight, held a 69-63 halftime lead and increased the margin to 79-67 with 9:03 left in the third quarter before Fleming scored 12 points and Sichting 7 to give Indiana a 102-96 lead entering the final period. The Pacers shot 59 percent in the third quarter and took the lead for good, at 86-85, when Fleming hit a pair of free throws at 4:12. Irvine also cited his team's 52-37 rebounding. "Rebounding is our strength," he said. "We've only been beaten once this year on the boards. Tonight we knew rebound-ing would keep us in the game."

Forward Clark Kellogg had 12 rebounds to lead Indiana while center Steve Stipanovich added 10. Chicago rookie Michael Jordan had a game-high 34 points while Orlando Woolridge added 27. Herb Williams had 19 for Indiana and Stipanovich 16.

"That's true." he said. "And if your name was on that list you'd be puying me more than 75 cents an hour to do your housecleaning." Gompers was always whining about not being paid the minimum wage. It made me want to fire him. How many times had I told him that since my household dirt was not engaged in interstate commerce, the federal government's builies had no power to dictate an exorbitant labor fee for its remov-

Listening to him feebly reasoning like a jailhouse lawyer made me glad he had not made the list of the United States's richest.

"Anybody who can't think more clearly than that doesn't deserve the minimum wage, much less a listing in Forbes as one of the richest people in America," I said.

Gompers's grunt was eloquent.
"All right, Gompers, since you've got the impertinence to wonder why I think I deserve to be on the Forbes list, I'll tell you why: because I've worked hard all my life, and lived by the Scout's code, and always volunteered, and invested in the stock markets instead of the race track, and believed in the American dream."

It felt wonderful announcing what a truly fine person I had always been. How many people on the Forbes list have worked as hard

It made me want to impoverish every one of them, to see them at my door pleading for menial house-hold chores and whimpering with gratitude when I offered them 65 cents an hour to scrub the rings out of my bathtub.

"I don't see where working hard on the American dream has anything to do with being richest," said Gompers. "A lot of people get themselves born so they could inherit money from their parents."

In his dull-witted way. Gompers had put his finger on the very core of the injustice. It made me proud I had hired him. "Gompers," I said, "I. too, got myself born and so, logically, I, too, should have inherited billions from my parents." "Right," said Gompers, "and since I also got myself born — " "That's not the same thing, Gompers. You were born to work for 75 cents an hour." I paused to reconsider. "Perhaps only 70 cents an hour," I said.

I knew what he would say: He accused me of being unfair. It made me want to sob. That labor could accuse me of unfairness — that hurt. Had anyone suffered greater unfairness than 1? Had I not got myself born, just like the richest people in the United States, only to be told that there wasn't so much as a sou for me to inherit? "That is unfairness, Gompers. Don't talk to me about the unfairness of a slight wage cut."

"If I'm cut to 70 cents." he said,
"I'm afraid I'll have to quit and go on welfare."

It was as though Gompers had struck me. I had been nurturing a man who had no faith whatever in the American dream of working hard and someday being born to parents who would leave him mil-

Carrie Rozelle: Dealing With Dyslexia

New York Times Service

New York — "I felt every day was going to be a hurricane," said Carrie Rozelle, recalling the days years ago when her son Jack's severe dyslexia was making him violent. "Because he couldn't read he developed emotional problems," she said. "He had difficulties with his brothers. He took toys. He broke them. He would steal. His books were torn up. There were lots of tears, lots of shouting, lots of anger."

shouting, lots of anger."

Yet out of this wrenching experience has come good, she said, Jack, now 22 years old, forced himself through special education programs and is working in film production. Her personal involvement in her son's learning disabilities spurred Rozelle to create the foundation for Children With Lorentz Directions. Foundation for Children With Learning Disabilities (FCLD), a national voluntary orga-nization dedicated to educating the public and increasing its awareness of such disabil-

Carrie Rozelle, 47, who has been married since 1973 to Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, said that in her view, and from her experience with the learn-ing disabilities of two of her three sons, Jack and Ralph, 17, "the greatest need is public awareness." The reason is that there are an estimated 10 million children "diagnosed as learning-disabled." she said.

She talks animatedly of her experiences with her children and of what she considers her mission.

"I discovered that Jack was dyslexic when he was eight," she said. "This young boy, physically healthy, was having difficulties in school. He would act up in the playground and the classroom. He was behind in reading, in math. He was in his third school in Los Angeles when a teacher, somehow clued in to disabilities, suggested that he be tested." Such tests, though simple, require time and money, she said, but should be done when every child enters kindergarten.
After the diagnosis, she said, "we began a hunt for schools."

"What we found was not much awareness of the problem," she said. "We found one school and it worked for a while, but only for a while. By the time Jack was 10 he had been to six schools." She was divorced from her first husband during this period. "Jack's fa-ther was no longer there," she said. "We moved away. All his stability vanished. But we came east and began looking into schools

Eventually she came upon the Rectory School in Pomfret, Connecticut, which she described as "special and caring" and where Jack progressed well through the school's final year, and his 15th year. He was less successful in two other preparatory schools, but went on to a year at Biscayne College in anymore," she said. "That may have been our mistake. Perhaps at the end of high school he should have gone to a vocational high school. He is artistic, and he always was interested in photography.

Ralph's dyslexia is not as severe as Jack's. He is in his last year of a special high school program in Utah. Her son Philip, 15, does not have learning disabilities. and is a student at a Connecticut preparatory school, and her daughter, Jeannie, 24, who has no disabilities either, is a graduate of the New York University Film School and is a producer for NFL

Mrs. Rozelle said the most difficult message to get across is that learning disabilities are not the same as mental retardation. There is no correlation at all," she said. "These are physiological problems that do not affect intellect. The hyperactivity and antisocial behavior that accompanies them is usually the result of the frustrations felt by the child. Jack's problem has led me to understand that parents must have their children tested, because then you know - then you able to deal with the problem."

The Foundation for Children With Learning Disabilities, in existence less than seven years, finances telephone hotelines in the United States, library services for children with disabilities, a program to help make family court judges aware of the relationships between learning disabilities and antisocial behavior and a program through the American Bar Association aimed at improving legal services to children with disabilities.

Rozelle said the foundation now is able to give more than $1 million a year to schools and programs for people with such disabilities as dyslexia, in which reading perceptions are disordered or nonexistent; aphasia, the loss of the power to use or understand words; perceptual handicaps, and impaired brain functions. All are usually manifested in "an imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell or to do mathematical calculations," she has written in "The FCLD Guide for Parents of Children with Learning Dis-

The foundation also publishes Their World, an annual magazine with articles about and for those with learning disabilities.

Runners Go for Broke

Two Britons who set out from London last April hoping to become the first men to run around the world say they are nearly broke but want to continue. Barety a fifth of the way through their 25,600-kilometer (15,900-mile) journey, Robin Cross, 24, and Henry Weston, 23, said in Damascus that they have little money and are thoroughly frustrated after heins. have little money and are thoroughly frustrated after being robbed in France, arrested in Yugoslavia, held at gunpoint by soldiers in Turkey, chased by wolves and delayed for weeks by customs officials along the way. "The running has been simple compared to all the other problems we've all the other problems we've faced," Cross said. "We've never really totally considered going home but we've come pretty close, said Weston. He said they had less than £200 (about $250) to last them from Damascus to Sydney, where more financial help has been promised.

A Florida accountant who bankrupted four other Monopoly wizards has earned the right to represent the United States in next year's world championship of the popular board game. Jim Forbes, 36, of Winter Haven, took less than two hours to win the final match of the seventh annual U.S. Monopoly championship Monday in Los Angeles. Forbes won a gold medallion and a benth in the world Monopoly competition, which will be held in Atlantic City, New Jersey — site of the real-life Boardwalk, Park Place and other addresses in the game. Parker Bros. will donate $4,692 the total yearly rents of all Monopoly board properties — to three charities chosen by Forbes. The world championships will mark Dr. Hans Marberger. Parker Bros. 50th anniversary as marketer of the real estate game invented by Charles B. Darrow. The game has been translated into 19 languages and sold more than 90 million copies worldwide, Parker Bros. said.

James Michener is finishing up his historical novel about Texas and will move on to a bigger project - Alaska. "I hope that my pro-posed novel, which will focus on Alaska, will round out the work I began almost 40 years ago with Tales of the South Pacific," he said. "I have decided to spend the next two or three summers in Alas-

> Patrick Duffy, who plays J. R. Ewing's "good" brother Bobby in the television series "Dallas" is to or it the show. Duffy, who has been with "Dallas" since it started seven the started seven t years ago, wants to do something else, his agent said. On Saturday, it was announced that Charlene Tilton, who has played Lucy Ewing since the series started, is to be written out of the show.

William Colby, former director of central intelligence, and Sally Shelton, a former U.S. ambassa-dor, planned to be married Tuesday in Venice, friends said. Colby. 61, headed the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency from 1973 to 1976. Shelton, 40, was ambassador to several West Indian islands, including Barbados and Grenada. It is the second marriage for both of them.

Starros Nierchos, 75, the Greek shipping tycoon, is in Innsbruck, Austria, for a routine medical checkup and chamois hunting, said a friend who denied reports that Niarchos was seriously ill. "He' came here along with his sons as he' has for the past five years. He wip9 be here for two to three days for on checkup and then go hunting." Sas.

Bert Parks is back in the beauty business. The former host of the Miss America Pageant will emcee the third annual Mother-Daughter Beauty Pageant Dec. 7 in Miami

The singer Marie Osmond has separated from her hasband, Stephen Craig. A family spokesman said they have "temporarily separated" and are working on a reconciliation. Craig sells real estate in Southern California and Marie is currently traveling on behalf of children's hospitals.
